        • increase student interaction
        • assess students comprehension of the course material both during the class and as a final assessment of the material

e) The Typhon tracking system is used to monitor and track clinical procedural competencies for the PA students on clinical rotation. The students enter competencies as they are performed and witnessed by clinical preceptors. The clinical preceptors sign the proficiency forms. These forms are turned in to the PA program to become part of the student’s clinical file documentation. Proficiency documentation is required for individual students by the program accrediting agency. The Typhon system assists in accurately assessing student competencies and documenting completion of clinical competencies. The Typhon technology is used:
- For proficiency documentation and monitoring,
- To monitor individual student skill levels,
- To track skill levels and design skill remediation as necessary. This information is further used to correlate skill remediation during callback day sessions,
- Professor Podd is responsible for reviewing proficiency forms and alerting clinical preceptors of student progress for discussion at callback day business meetings or individual student advisement as necessary,

More than 30 members of the College (i.e. faculty, staff, students) participated in this unique event aimed at engaging and educating middle-school aged students about careers in health care. This was a rather historic service event for the College considering that five programs of study (Pharmacy, Physician Assistant, Clinical Laboratory Sciences, Radiologic Sciences, and the Emergency Medical Service Institute) collaboratively conceptualized, developed and executed the health fair at MS 72. Based on the feedback received from the middle-school students, teachers and school administrators, the health fair was an overwhelming success and will serve as the model for future College-based health fair events. In addition to providing an overview of professions for each participating program, the College partnered with the Jamaica Estates Volunteer Ambulance Company to provide students with the opportunity to see and touch an ambulance and to receive instruction on emergency services. The University’s Vincentian Institute for Social Action (VISA) also provided support for the health fair by providing our College participants with bus service to and from MS 72.
