Dear Students,

“It always seems impossible until it’s done.”

— Nelson Mandela

Here it is, the final Bridge to the Bar email. You’ve listened to hundreds of hours of lectures, attended all the workshops, completed thousands of practice questions, spent days/weeks/months reviewing a massive amount of material and now it is your time to go do what you have prepared to do and take the bar exam this Tuesday and Wednesday.

Remember that you have not been preparing for this moment for only the past 10 weeks, but for the past three years since you first walked into St. John’s Law School. You, more than any other group of students, have been asked to endure events that no one before you had encountered and, in fact, no one ever could have predicted. And you did more than endure them – you overcame them and proved to yourselves and everyone around you that you came here to succeed and nothing will ever stop you.

I have been lucky enough to work with my previous students since May and I have gotten to know many more of you since bar prep kicked off officially after graduation. You have been warriors in your single-minded focus and I, along with Profs. Simone, Alexander, Cole, and Ruescher are extremely impressed by your commitment and your incredible progress.

Many of you will wake up Tuesday morning nervous and eager to begin the exam. Know that we will all be here, rooting for you, and waiting to see everyone on the other side at the Bar Passage Party in November.

Good luck, do what you came to do, and YOU GOT THIS!

Best,
Prof. Paras
