barbri AGENCY 5.

II. CONTRACT LIABILITY—AGENCY POWER

A. ACTUAL AND APPARENT AUTHORITY

When deciding whether a principal will be bound on an agent's contract, it should first be determined whether the agent had actual authority. If she did not, look to see whether apparent authority was present.

CMR Exam Tip The most important of all agency concepts for bar exam purposes are those involving actual and apparent authority. A very high percentage of questions will require you to display your understanding of this area.

1. Actual Authority

Actual authority is authority that the agent reasonably believes she possesses based on the principal's dealings with her. It may be express or implied.

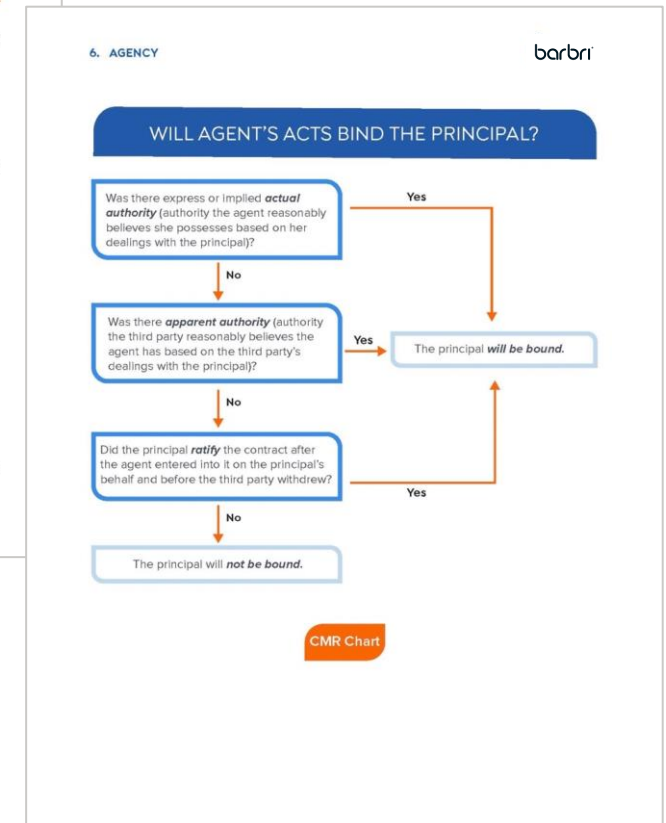

a. Express

Express authority is that which is actually contained within the four corners of the agency agreement. It is effective even if it was granted mistakenly or because of misrepresentation.

b. Implied

Implied authority is that which the agent reasonably believes she has as a result of the principal's actions. It includes authority:

- 1) Incidental to express authority;
- 2) Arising out of custom known to the agent;
- 3) Resulting from prior acquiescence by the principal;
- 4) To take emergency measures;
- 5) To delegate authority in cases of ministerial acts, where circumstances require, where performance is impossible without delegation, or where delegation is customary;
- 6) To pay for and accept delivery of goods where there is authority to purchase;
- 7) To give general warranties as to fitness and quality and grant customary covenants in land sales, collect payment, and deliver where there is authority to sell; and
- 8) To manage investments in accordance with the "prudent investor" standard.

More than 5,500
multiple-choice
practice questions

The screenshot displays the Barbri MCO Practice Bank interface. On the left, a navigation menu includes Overview, Questions (highlighted), Exams, Statistics, and Support. The main content area shows a question about libel per se. The question text is: "A man was jealous that his girlfriend had started dating someone else. As a prank, he decided to leave a message on her answering machine that the new boyfriend had committed a robbery of a local convenience store. The man knew the statement was not true. Since he and his girlfriend were both fluent in Spanish, he left the voice message in Spanish. Before the girlfriend came home that night, a houseguest played the message, but she did not understand it. The boyfriend then played the message and deleted it. The boyfriend brought an action against the man for damages. Will the boyfriend prevail?"

The multiple-choice options are:

- A Yes, because the statement was libel per se and actionable without proof of general or special damages.
- B Yes, because the statement placed the boyfriend in a false light.
- C No, because robbery is not a crime involving moral turpitude.
- D No, because the houseguest did not understand Spanish.

At the bottom of the question area are "STOP" and "ANSWER" buttons. On the right side of the interface, there is a timer showing 00:07:20, a "PAUSE" button, and a "Questions" section with a grid of question numbers (1-30) and a "Flag" toggle. At the bottom right, there is a score summary table:

⚠ Your answer is incorrect.

Explanation Question

(D) is correct. The boyfriend will not prevail because the houseguest did not understand Spanish. The voice message on the girlfriend's answering machine would constitute libel per se, for which neither general damages (harm to reputation) nor special damages (pecuniary loss) would be required. However, a necessary element for proof of defamation is publication. The defamatory statement must be published to any third person who reasonably understands. Since the houseguest did not understand Spanish, no publication occurred. Choice (B) is incorrect because an action for false light privacy – which attributes to the plaintiff actions he did not take or views he does not hold—would also require the element of publication. Furthermore, since common law crimes are generally deemed to involve moral turpitude, the commission of a robbery would be sufficient as a crime involving moral turpitude. For this reason, Choice (C) is incorrect. Finally, Choice (A), although a correct statement of law, reaches the wrong conclusion and is incorrect due to lack of the element of publication.

Question ID: MTSP002

A	Yes, because the statement was libel per se and actionable without proof of general or special damages.	×

Criminal Law Essay #1

The issue presented in this fact pattern is whether the Owner is guilty of larceny by false pretense.

Larceny is defined as a taking and carrying away of tangible personal property, of another by trespass, with intent to permanently deprive the person of the property. In this fact pattern the Owner did commit larceny when he sold the refurbished computer to the customer. The Owner went beyond puffery to induce the customer to purchase. He told him that they were the best refurbished computers in town when he knew two other companies were better at refurbishing computers. He told the customer the technician installed new hard drives when he knew it was likely that new hard drives were not installed. He took possession of the $250 for the purchase of the computer knowing that he gave false information to make the sale.

False Pretense is obtaining title to personal property of another by an intentional false statement with intent to defraud the other. The offense of false pretenses generally consists of: (i) obtaining title; (ii) to the property of another; (iii) by a knowing (or in some states, intentional) false statement of past or existing fact; (iv) with the intent to defraud another. For the crime of false pretenses, title must pass (if title does not pass, the crime will be larceny by trick).

In most states, the "knowing" element can be proved by showing that the defendant had notice of a high probability of the statement's falsity and a deliberate decision to avoid learning the truth. If the defendant believes the statement to be true, he has not committed false pretenses (even if his belief is unreasonable).

Intent to defraud can be proved by showing that the defendant intended for the victim to rely on the misrepresentation.

The owner committed false pretense by telling the customer, "We have the best refurbished computers in town." The owner knew they did not have the best refurbished computers in town as he Commented [ds1]: So how is a purchase a "taking or carrying away"? this is not a straight larceny situation as you state below by knowing false pretenses. So this "analysis" of basic larceny was not time well spent. Focus on the false pretense issue and he didn't just steal (larceny) the customer's money.

Commented [ds2]: Good start to your rule. But remember, rule statements are more than a mere technicality to be placed at the "Rule" place marker section in your IRAC or CRAC paradigm. Rather, rules are the foundation on which you will build your analysis. To score maximum points on an essay, you will need to provide more than just a mere recitation of the rule. You need to make sure that your rule is sufficient and you might also need to show the grader that you understand what the rule means and how it relates to the legal problem(s) by including an explicit rule explanation.

Commented [ds3]: And anytime the rule contains several distinct elements that must be met, number them.

Commented [ds4]: You know what puffery is as you mentioned it above. so fully explain commercial puffery and you will see that this is probably just puffery.
