Respected across the country and around the world, The School of Education (SOE) at St. John’s University offers graduate programs that prepare highly qualified teachers, administrators, researchers, counselors and policy makers for success in today’s multicultural learning environments.

The School offers flexible master’s, doctoral and career changing programs as well as professional certificates. Graduate students gain the credentials, knowledge and skills to advance on the job or change their career direction.

Established in 1908, SOE fosters close relationships with public, private and parochial schools across the New York region. Faculty and administrators advise schools on curricular and managerial direction.

Regina Mistretta, Ed.D.
Associate Professor of Mathematics Education and Program Coordinator (Staten Island Campus)

Dr. Mistretta has won federal and private support for her efforts to help improve learning at local public and parochial schools. She has worked closely with teachers, administrators, children and parents at the pre-kindergarten to eighth-grade levels throughout the New York City area. She recently invited more than 30 local elementary school children — and their parents — to campus for mathematics-strengthening activities. A specialist in pedagogical practices and professional development models, Dr. Mistretta earned her Ed.D. at Teachers College, Columbia University.
