2. Authors and Author Responsibilities

The Review of Business is not a profit-making endeavor. It has no submission or publication fees. Information on author responsibilities on preparing a manuscript are at www.stjohns.edu/Rob. Upon submitting a contribution for publishing consideration to the Review of Business, the author represents the following: The contribution is original work written by the stated authors, it has been prepared in a personal capacity and not on behalf of a government or institution, it has not been previously published, will not be submitted to any other journal, does not infringe any copyright or violate any other person's or entity's rights, or contain any unlawful matter, it does not violate the Singapore statement on research integrity, it does not violate the Montreal statement on research integrity in cross-boundary research collaborations. The contributor represents that he or she or they obtained written permission from copyright owners for any excerpts from copyrighted works that are included and credited those sources in the contribution. The contributor further represents that he or she or they informed any co-author(s) of the terms of this publishing agreement and that the contribution is submitted on behalf and on the authority of all authors that appear on the contribution.

3. Peer-review Process

This is a peer-reviewed journal. The objective of the peer-review process is to help the journal Editor evaluate whether a contribution is appropriate for publication in the Review of Business. The Editor's response for the authors of a contribution communicates to them the advice/suggestions/issues reviewers provide and resolves for the authors any conflicting advice reviewers may have offered. Upon review, if the Editor does not accept a contribution for publication, explains in writing to the authors what revisions or additions are required for publication. The contributions under review are treated confidentially prior to their publication. Much of the spectrum of how business engages with risk, and how such engagement, in turn, impacts society is opaque. Therefore, this journal is sensitive to the conceptual and practical considerations imposed on scholars of business by this opaqueness.

4. Publication Ethics

The Review of Business adheres to the responsible research standards and guidelines for both its authors and editors/reviewers promulgated by the World Conference on Research Integrity (<https://wcrif.org>). The Review of Business adheres to both the Singapore statement on research integrity and the Montreal statement on research integrity in cross-boundary research collaborations. This journal affirms that the word 'boundary' includes national, cultural, institutional, disciplinary and knowledge demarcations. Both the Singapore statement and the Montreal statement seek to affirm and preserve the integrity of both the research published in a journal and the process that resulted in that publication. Furthermore, the Editor of the Review of Business seeks to avoid criticisms of the research publication process as documented by Grassmann (1986, Interfaces, 16.2: 43-51) and by Macdonald (2015, Journal of Management Inquiry, 24.3:264-279).

5. Copyright and Access

When an author submits a contribution for publishing consideration to the Review of Business, the author, upon acceptance of the contribution for publication, assigns to the Review of Business the copyright in the contribution and any tables, illustrations or other material submitted for publication as part of the contribution. This assignment of rights means that the author has granted to the Review of Business the exclusive right to publish and reproduce the contribution in print and other media of the journal's choosing, and the right to license others to do the same, effective upon the acceptance of the contribution for publication. Notwithstanding this assignment of rights, the contributor retains all proprietary rights other than the copyright in any processes, procedures or articles described in the contribution. The Review of Business licenses back the following rights to the contributor in the version of the contribution as originally accepted for publication: The right to self-archive the contribution, the right to transmit, print and share copies of the contribution provided that there is no fee charged or the distribution is not widespread or systematic. The Review of Business also licenses back to the author the personal right of the contributor to send or transmit individual copies of the published version to colleagues upon their specific explicit request provided no fee is charged, and the right to include/post the published version in normal teaching or professional duties. Access to the articles published in the Review of Business are available on-line either free-of-charge from https:// www.ignited.global or through a subscription/pay-per-view scheme from the full-text databases that carry the journal.
